

Goodnight, Wildhaven

A bedtime story from the creature park.

When the sun slips down behind the hill,
and all the busy park grows still,
the keeper walks from gate to den,
to say goodnight to every friend.

Flufftail hops one final lap,
then curls up for a meadow nap.
"Goodnight, Flufftail, soft and small,
the comfiest bunny of them all."

Pebblit yawns a stony yawn,
been rolling boulders since the dawn.
"Goodnight, Pebblit, sturdy friend,
even mountains rest at day's end."

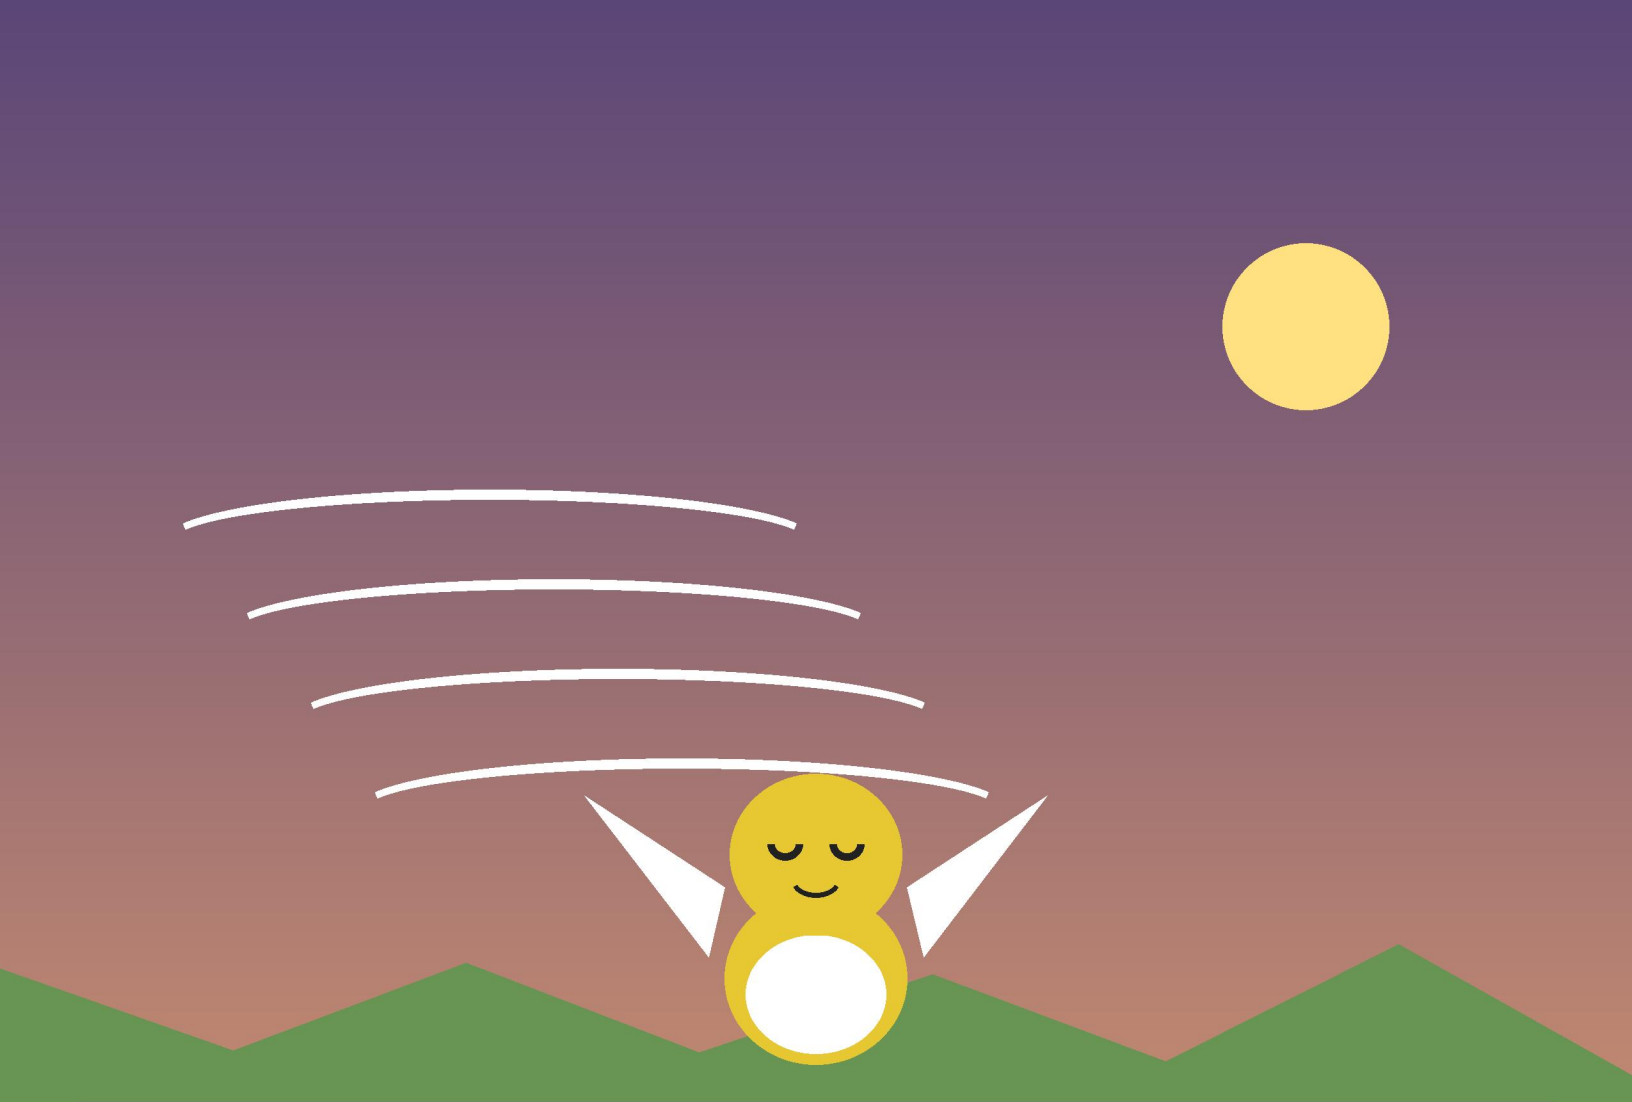

Aquaphin makes one last splash,
a silver ripple, then a dash.
"Goodnight, Aquaphin, dive down deep,
the pond will rock you fast asleep."

Emberling glows warm and low,
a tiny lantern's sleepy glow.
"Goodnight, Emberling, dim your light,
you'll shine again tomorrow night."

Mossback moves so slow, so deep,
he's halfway into dreams already.
"Goodnight, Mossback, mossy dome, wherever you are, you're always home."

Zephyrix races one more breeze,
then folds her wings beneath the trees.
"Goodnight, Zephyrix, swift and free,
the wind will hum your lullaby."

Glimmerwing sheds sparks of light,
confetti for the coming night.
"Goodnight, Glimmerwing, gleam and glow,
you make the dark a wonder-show."

And on the farthest, darkest hill, Nocturnix watches, wise and still.
"Goodnight, Nocturnix, count the stars,
and guard the dreams that will be ours."

The lamps blink on, the gates are closed,
the fountain sings, the park's in repose.
Every habitat, snug and tight,
hums with sleepy creature-light.

So close your eyes, my sleepy friend,
the day is done, the dreams begin.
The stars will keep the park in sight —
Goodnight, Wildhaven. Friends, goodnight.